SCHOOL FOR STAMMERERS

Only Such Institution West of the Missouri River Will Be in Provo.

Provo is to have a school for stammerers. William E. Bassett, now manager of the Provo woollen mills and former president of the board of education, will conduct such an institution, which will be called the Utah School for Stammerers.

Mr. Bassett was himself a sufferer from this too common affliction for forty-five years. He has been cured and knows the results which will follow the exercise of will combined with training in correct breathing and the handling of the voice. Mr. Bassett says he was compelled to refuse many good positions because of his stammering and it was a constant drag upon his career. At a comparatively recent date he became interested in statements of cures of this trouble and after investigation went east and took up a course of study in the treatment of the affliction. He cured himself and has since helped and cured many others.

Recently he decided to give his time and duct such an institution, which will be helped and cured many others.

Recently he decided to give his time and attention to those who cannot talk straight, and will open the school, which at first will be carried on at his home. There is now no such institution west of the Missouri river, and with the results he has already achieved Mr. Bassett believes there is a good field here.
